AFTER LAMPING THE DOPE.

I lost when I picked the Giants, I failed with the Partmouth dope. I touted Penn against old Cornell, But I didn't give up hope.

I backed Virginia to do it. And the Navy to keep its goat, I bet on Yale and they took my kale, For they had me by the throat.

I hunched the Worcester eleven And barely escaped the mob. h's certain now, but you've got to allow, That I picked John Tener a job.

"Wait till next year," sings the Navy supporters, reminding us of the St. Louis sporting writers.

THE BASEBALL MANAGER—Should be a large, pompous individual, wearing loud waistcoats, or a wizened little crab with a guilty look. Should allow himself to be interviewed now and then, but never say anything. Should make funny signs from the bench to make the bluff strong that he is controlling the actions of the noble young athletes out on the diamond. Should hold up the postponement of the daily battle until the last minute to prove that he means to win every game during the season. Should bow and smile whenever introduced to members of the Noble Order of the Dyed-in-the-Wool Nut, because all real managers do that.

THE FOOTBALL STAR—Should be a fierce-looking individual, much begadded. Should make many steps along the shelf season, the same statement state effect that Glenn Warner compared the bartmouth and Brown elevens to the detriment of the detriment of the former were false, according to a letter received from the Carlisic coach by Capitain-elect Whitney, of the Green. Coach Warner said:
